TRAX: Current Washington State University Vancouver Provost Daniel J. Bernardo has announced that he is stepping down and the university is seeking to gain student and faculty input in the university's search for the next provost. [:10]

All WSU campuses are holding listening sessions between Jan. 14 and 17. The search for the next provost began after Bernardo's announcement Dec. 3, 2018. The duties of the provost include attending to all aspects of the university's academic excellence and mission. The provost works with the university's president to provide direction and leadership for the institution. [:20]

WSU's governing body members Dave Cillay, Mel Netzhammer (Netz-ham-mer), and Tom Tripp host the forum at WSU Vancouver. Cillay shares his thoughts to students and faculty on what he wants to see in the next provost in terms of abilities and outcomes. [:15]

AX: We want someone that's very collaborative; someone able to work throughout the system and treat all campuses equally. [:05]

TRAX: The search committee for the next provost hopes to hold interviews with final candidates in late April and appoint the provost by the end of WSU's spring semester. More to come as the search continues. In Washington, I'm Kenia Garnica. [:60]

I would like someone who is involved in student activity and success. I also think the next provost should create a better reputation for WSU so we can be known for more than being a party school.
